

Why Should We Care About Development Finance? ...because it's our money!

Volume 2, Issue 20, November 30, 2018

Issues In Mainstreaming India's Poor In Banking

Providing poor people access to financial products need to be seen as part of diverse poor friendly economic policies and not a panacea for poverty alleviation. These policies may include increased investments in irrigation and allied infrastructure in rural areas, actively facilitating wage and self-employment avenues for millions of youth and proactive role of the state in providing adequately for social sectors like education and health. ## Two-day Conference On Global Financial Crisis: A Decade after Lehman

India had been relatively insulated from the 2008 financial crisis due to the public nature of the banking system and their limited market exposure. A decade after the meltdown, the Indian banking system is in deep crisis. In this context, there is a need to look closer into the post-crisis reforms prescribed to financial institutions and their impacts on the Indian Banking system. On December 3 and 4, 2018, a conference is being organised in Delhi to understand the various factors contributing to the crisis of the Indian Banking system in the context of the post-crisis reforms. Limited seats available. Register Now...

Gurgaon's Rapid Metro Was Based on Entirely Fraudulent Numbers

DLF originally pitched the Gurgaon metro as a Rs 325-crore project, but the cost soared to over Rs 1,000 crore after it was tendered and IL&FS Transportation Network Ltd (ITNL) became the sole owner. The very rationale and viability were based on completely fraudulent claims about potential riders. Read more...
