The Economy This Week!

As more irregularities are reported with respect to the functioning of the RBI, it is a good time to ask who is in charge of running these important central institutions. It has also become known that the present government pushed for a monetary policy that would have made borrowings cheaper at the cost of inflation, adversely affecting the poor.

In other news, RBI has finally taken notice of the rising inflation, even slashing real GDP growth for FY23 from 7.8% to 7.2% in the backdrop of global shocks.

This week, we also take a closer look at the debt crisis in Sri Lanka.

Reclaiming the Right to Unions

A truly historic development took place in the US earlier this month which has attracted little attention in India. The workers of tech giant Amazon's New York warehouse have elected an employee of their choice to negotiate on their behalf, thereby ensuring their right to collective bargaining and protection against exploitation.

Tumakuru Smart City Project: Part 1

The Smart City Mission introduced some new features in terms of how urban development programmes are implemented in India. Usually, the cities included in the programmes are selected based on some criteria, or the decision is left to the state governments. But in Tumakuru, the process was changed, a two-stage competitive process for selecting cities was introduced.

Should Corporates Own Banks?

In 1993 with the liberalization policy and the conditions implemented by the World Bank & IMF, banking was extended to private players. 143 applications were received from several people wanting to establish banks, from which 21 were accepted, while only 10 could finally start. These included the Times Bank by Bennet and Coleman, Indus Ind Bank by the Hindujas, even out of these ten, four failed.
